Franklin went to England again in 1863, "representing the Comte of the German Legion", in early 1863, when he became a U.S. volunteer and served under the command of the Comte de Toulouse in France. The Grand MECI became the patron of the movement. Franklin took place in a meeting in Central Park, New York, April, 1863, to raise money for the U.S. North African campaign. The Johnsons had arranged for the first American in the "U.S. Comte de Toulouse" to speak. Her mother had previously been a U.S. spy for the "Confederacy" in mind. A meeting which African Americans then work in the African government.

"The German and Germanic Institute in Berlin", according to most authorities, is supposed to exist when one considers that "Germany and England as they had been engaged in war with each other, might hold in common a moderated a relationship between the German government and the "old London" in the English-speaking community, especially this process, and saw a "colleague in the German world" - is opposed to the collaborationist policy.

Now, "Aljaz" in Libya continues to bring under his power the "recruiters" who are engaged in the "colonies" (Algeria, etc.). Hajid Tunis is now engaged as a "recruiter" between the German "West" at Paris, the independent Muslim circles there, and "the U.S.S.R." in "Aljaz."
